Ms. Peregrine’s Home for Peculiar Children

By Random Riggs

Literature Guide by Samantha Cleaver
Introduction

Students who enjoy fantasy, ghost stories, and supernatural stories will enjoy Miss Peregrine’s Home for Peculiar Children, which is a good read aloud, small group discussion text, or independent study for an advanced reader. This text seamlessly incorporates advanced language and vocabulary into a story that’s engaging for middle school students. In addition, it’s a good text to use to study genre, plot development, and creativity in fiction.

Reading Level: Middle School, Grades 6-8

This guide includes:

- 14 menu-style reading response guides that include vocabulary words for students to define while reading, space to summarize the reading, three “required” questions to answer and between six and nine other questions to answer regarding the text. The menu structure provides students with choice while holding them to high expectations when it comes to responding to the text.
- 3 multiple choice and short answer quizzes that you can use to discuss how to evaluate and analyze text, as well as how to answer multiple choice questions about literature.
- 13 ideas for final evaluation projects that include whole group and independent projects.
- A multiple choice answer guide for the quizzes.
- Questions that encourage students to analyze, evaluate, and justify their answers throughout.

Suggestions for Use:

- Reading Menus can be used as part of reader response journals; students respond to the questions in their journals and share their responses in discussion.

Chapter 7-9 Quiz

Short Answer

10. In the townspeople’s view, who is a more plausible culprit for the crime in the sheep’s pen, Worm or Jacob? Why?

11. Which historical element is the most significant in this story so far the submerged U-boat or the air raid? Justify your answer.

12. Create a timeline of the plot so far. Include important events and connect foreshadowed events with the most recent events.
Whole Class Assessment Option:
1. In small groups, choose one aspect of the story to research using the text and other tools. Categories to include: ornithology, genre, side shows, World War II history. Then, as a class, use your research to create a Google web site about this novel.
2. As a class, divide the book into sections. Then, reread each section and rewrite it into a screenplay for a play or movie. As a class, edit and revise your scripts so that you can present or film it. After you are finished, compare your version to the novel. What events were included? What events were omitted and why?
3. As a class, divide the book into sections. Then, retell the story as a graphic novel or comic strip. After you are finished, discuss the experience. What interpretations did you make as you retold your part of the story? How easy was it to translate the text into images?

Independent Assessment Options:
1. Draw or create a photo that could be a child from the story. Create a back story for this child that aligns with the text. How did your child become peculiar? What was their peculiarity? How does this story fit in with the overarching story of Miss Peregrine’s children?
2. The author creates a world of peculiars in this novel. Use the information from the narrative about peculiars to create an advertisement to recruit for more peculiars. (Start by researching old circus or side show posters.)
3. Research antique photos (some places to start: http://www.billblanton.com/archive.htm, http://www.shorpy.com/, and http://www.flickr.com/groups/381873@N24/). Choose one or two to use to construct a story of your own. Then, after your story is complete, apply your experience to develop your understanding of the author’s motivations. Why do you think Ransom Riggs chose to build a story around old photos?
4. Write a post-script to this story that answers the questions:
   a. What happens to Jacob and the peculiars?
   b. What happens to Jacob’s father and mother?
   c. Does Jacob ever regret his decision?
5. Research the author Ransom Riggs (start at his blog: http://www.ransomriggs.com/). Then, create a speech that introduces him at a book signing. What information is interesting about Riggs as an author? What life experiences and inspirations led him to write the Miss Peregrine story? What does he have coming up next?
6. Birds are everpresent in this story. Use online and text sources to research birds in literature (symbolism, how they’ve been used in stories, etc). Then, create a report about how Ransom Riggs used birds in typical and new ways in his story.
7. Imagine that you are working in Hollywood and are pitching this story to a movie producer. Create a movie proposal based on this story that tells the story, and justifies why it should be made into a movie. Consider: who would watch this movie? What other successful movies or novels is it similar to?
